Interviews

It is essential to seek financial tools that involve the private sector in investing in conservation

Biodiversity conservation faces a significant funding challenge that cannot be addressed solely with public funds alone. As part of the LIFE Stewardship project, Fundación Global Nature is working to identify and evaluate innovative financial instruments that engage not only public administrations, but also the private sector and civil society. We spoke with Eduardo de Miguel, Managing Director of the foundation, about the role of land stewardship, opportunities for strategic sectors in Spain and the financial instruments that can make long-term conservation viable.

School Neighborhood Stewardship

School neighborhood stewardship in Tudela (Navarra)

We learn about the school neighbourhood stewardship initiative run by El Castillo Foundation School. Abel del Rey, a teacher at the school, tells us about his experience of using land stewardship in education to improve the educational center's surroundings, together with his students. Through this methodology of learning and community service, the work done in the classroom has a social impact and is recognised by the community around the school.
